Why do people choose private health insurance?

Public healthcare, which includes Medicare, is provided to all Australians and permanent residents. The public system provides affordable, accessible, and high-quality health care. It provides cover for medical services such as doctors' and specialists' consultations, admissions to public hospitals, and also subsidises some drugs under the Pharmaceutical Benefits Scheme.

If you go to a public hospital as a public patient, you will be treated free of charge, by a doctor appointed by the hospital. However, depending on the treatment you need, you may have to join a waiting list.

Private health insurance gives you more choices about your hospital treatment: you can choose from a wider range of hospitals, and you can choose the doctor you want. You can usually avoid public waiting lists and choose when you will go to hospital for your procedure.

Private health insurance can also provide you with cover for out-of-hospital extras such as ambulance, dental care, optical, physiotherapy and other services not covered in the public system.

While private health insurance gives you more options for your healthcare, it also means there may be some extra costs you need to pay yourself. Unlike the public system, you may be charged a 'gap fee' for your doctor's services. If you're being treated for a condition which isn't fully covered on your policy, you may also have to pay for some or all of your hospital theatre and accommodation fees. Your hospital policy may also have an excess or co-payment - an excess or co-payment is an amount you agree to pay towards the cost of hospital treatment in exchange for lower premiums.

If you are planning a hospital admission, always ask your health fund, doctor and hospital about any potential expenses you may have to pay.

Ten tips from the Private Health Insurance Ombudsman for avoiding health insurance problems

- 1 Consider taking out the highest level of hospital cover you can afford; to save on premiums, choose an excess rather than exclusions/restrictions.
- 2 Review your policy every year to check that it continues to meet your needs.
- 3 Make sure you understand any waiting periods, restrictions or limits applying to your cover.
- 4 Read all of the information your fund sends you carefully.
- 5 Ensure your premiums are up to date.
- 6 Tell your fund if you move house, add a family member, or any other change that might affect your cover.
- 7 Contact your fund before you go to hospital to check whether you will be covered.
- 8 Talk to your doctors about their fees and ask about gap cover.
- 9 If you decide to change funds, make sure you understand the difference in benefits before changing.
